Chapel Hill apartment residents vow to fight displacement

'So high that we can't live here'

By Alex Bass

CHAPEL HILL - Horace Johnson Jr. is OK with being the "bad guy" to cite what he calls the potential for "extinction level gentrification" in the historic Elliot Woods Apartments.

Johnson - son of Horace Johnson, Hillsborough's first Black mayor - says both homeowners and landlords need tax assistance to mitigate rising costs, including rental fees, for those dependent upon affordable housing.

For Elliot Woods families, and those in its sister

Chase Park community - both established as integrated communities in 1974 - it is a matter of dollars and cents, no matter the owners.

"Where are you going to go and live?" Johnson asked.

Elliot Woods residents like Salima Smith have heard about people being relocated to hotels during a renovation of buildings.

Everyone in here has seen an example of that happening and people not being able to come back," said Smith, a resident since 2012.

Residential Properties Management has started a contractually bound process to sell both Elliot Woods and Chase Park to Elliot Chase Housing Partners.

Residents of both communities were informed of the potential sale in a May 13 letter from RPM. Smith and on-site property manager Tamu Graves Coleman provided matching copies of this letter.

"That has been the only communication that has been given thus far," Coleman said. "This way, nothing is taken out of context or misinterpreted."

Coleman, also an Elliot Woods resident, said tenants have her telephone number for needs during and after business hours.

Smith shared a May 13 document from ECHP that she said was posted on their mailboxes. Current and future rental rates were included with the statement:

"The proposed increase is needed to secure financing to conduct a significant renovation of the Project (pending sale). Higher rents will be needed to cover as-

CLT model binds residents and generational housing

RALEIGH - The conclusion of National Homeownership Month, observed in June, yielded another opportunity for the Raleigh Area Land Trust to highlight the need for more affordable housing in the Triangle.

RALT's planned acquisition of 12 townhomes in Apex represents a footprint expansion for the Capital city entity based upon the community land trust model.

"It's contributing to members of the community," RALT CEO Kevin Campbell said. "They might even work for the municipality itself."

Campbell said reducing long commutes so employees can live among the communities they serve is beneficial for all.

The identical Apex units - available for residents earning below 80% of area median income - will be shared among Prestwick and Huxley communities. The three-story townhomes include three bedrooms, two-and-a-half baths and a two-car garage.

Campbell said RALT has received approximately 15 inquiries and is planning additional homebuyer information sessions in the coming months.

"We don't like to say 'No,'" Campbell said of aspiring home-

Why school has more Black kids thinking about suicide

By Quintessa Williams
WORD IN BLACK

In November, a Jacksonville, Florida, mother watched her 16-year-old son unravel. Already the target of racist bullying at school, he was one of many Black students across the country who received racist text messages after the presidential election. It hit hard: the teenager became withdrawn, afraid to return to school and was overwhelmed by a feeling that he didn't belong.

He eventually returned a few weeks later, but much like the bullying, the school never addressed it publicly. The school and the world, his mother said, "just moved on from the story." But the situation almost cost him his life.

"He told me later that he didn't want to go back to school and that the reason he gave me his phone was that he had been thinking about ending his life," said his mother, who asked Word in Black to remain anonymous to protect their privacy. "And that's when I just broke down."

The mother's story is not an anomaly. Black K-12 students across the country are battling a growing mental health crisis that experts say is connected to their school environments.

According to a new report from The AAKOMA Project, a nonprofit organization that helps address the mental health needs of youth of color, more than 40% of Black youth ages 13-17 seriously considered suicide in the past year. At the same time, 38% self-harmed in some way, and more than 16% attempted suicide at least once.

"The fact that this is not a national crisis with all hands on deck trying to solve it is unconscionable to me," said Dr. Alfiee Breland-Noble, a clinical psychologist and founder of The AAKOMA Project. "That the needs of so many Black youth have gone unnoticed — and remain sorely under-addressed — is devastating."

From disproportionately high discipline rates to biased teachers, experts say systemic racism in schools chips away at a young person's sense of safety and self-worth. In AAKOMA's 2025 State of Youth Mental Health report, 21% of Black youths reported suffering racial trauma from teachers and other school employees. Nearly 30% said they experienced racial discrimination at the hands of school police.

The report also found that three-quarters of Black youth say they feel like a burden to others, and about as many reported feeling as though they don't belong — feelings commonly linked to suicidal ideations.

Breland-Noble adds that society, schools included,

Wake County online dashboard access for measuring fair housing progress

By Alex Bass
alex.bass@triangletribune.com

RALEIGH - Lorena Dione-McDowell, having served six years as Wake County's director of the Department of Housing Affordability and Community Revitalization, knew housing data was available.

As of last May, nearly a year after Dione-McDowell's departure, that data is accessible via a new wake.gov online dashboard for housing.

"If all of a sudden, a whole area is more educated, less Black or whatever, then that is the area that is gentrifying," said Dione-McDowell, CEO of Balance Community Advisors. "You can see where economic wealth is growing. You can see where people are moving, in terms of color."

Dione-McDowell told attendees at the annual Raleigh Fair Housing Conference last week that data is more imperative than ever for addressing federal cutbacks that further strain already marginalized communities. "We honor the past by refusing to repeat it here," she said. "We shape the future by choosing to act - right now."

DaQuanta Copeland, Raleigh Fair Housing Hearing Board vice chair and a Wake County community engagement coordinator, said the data can be organized into various layers for diverse stakeholders.

"It definitely is a model and a tangible resource to municipalities in the county," she said. "A lot of organizations utilize that data to track their measurable metrics."

sociated costs.” Elliot Woods’ current rent for a two-bedroom apartment was listed as $1,249. “My rent has been $725 for at least the last three years,” Smith said.

Coleman confirmed the rental scale as $700/$725/$775/$900 for apartments with one, two, three and four bedrooms, respectively.

The same document included a $301 increase at the RPM-ECHP closing that would yield a $1,550 rental fee - 114% more than $725.

The letter from RPM also stated, “Please know that no immediate action is required on your part at this time.”

Residents, however, have a different mindset.

“We’re actually the lunch,” said Laila Bradford, an Elliot Woods resident since 1997. “That’s why we’re not sitting at the table.”

Smith, Bradford and others scoff at the notion that low income means low standards.

Bradford has been honored by Chapel Hill-Carrboro City Schools as its classified employee of the year.

“I’m good enough to go run the board meetings, but my pay is not going to be good enough to live here,” she said. “I know we’re paying, but I don’t know what we’re paying for.”

Coleman said there is no timetable for the proposed sale, which includes Department of Housing and Urban Development details, too.

The tenants, while seeking open communication with Town of Chapel Hill and Orange County officials, along with any parties involved in the prospective sale, have their own lingering questions.

“What do you want your future generations to know about how you handled supporting a crisis,” Smith said.

“Did you actually support it? Did you stand by idly? Did you do nothing? Did you oppose it?”

“I don’t know what they plan to gain from it. But I understand what they plan to lose.”

School has more Black kids thinking suicide

often compounds the racial trauma by minimizing (and at times flat-out ignoring) the emotional hurt associated with the daily microaggressions and bias they experience.

“Black youth need to feel seen, heard and valued for exactly who they are,” she said. “But many of them are growing up in schools that ignore their reality and deny their pain.”

Despite the warning signs, many Black students still aren’t getting help. According to the AAKOMA report, nearly 1 in 3 Black youth who needed mental health care didn’t receive it. For Black boys, the picture is even more alarming: they are among the least likely to receive care and are more likely to view mental illness as a weakness.

Breland-Noble says that belief is shaped by cultural stigma and a lack of safe spaces to express vulnerability.

“Mental health is a foundational aspect of the educational experience, and parents, teachers and caregivers are the gatekeepers of that care,” Breland-Noble said. “So, when stigma still exists in our schools and communities — especially around our youth needing help — it prevents access before it even begins.”

Don’t cut our health care to give tax breaks to the rich

By Debbie DeWeese

BEACON MEDIA

I’ve seen from every angle just how essential Medicaid is to helping working families get by. But the bill that passed the U.S. House last week would raise health care costs and cause hundreds of thousands of North Carolinians to lose their health care coverage altogether — just to give more tax breaks to the rich.

As the bill moves to the U.S. Senate, our own Senator Thom Tillis has positioned himself as a key swing vote and played a role earlier this month in potentially cutting even more funding from Medicaid with his position on a key Senate committee. We need him and all our representatives to vote against the bill to protect our health care.

For several years, I worked with domestic violence survivors. I helped my clients get housing and signed them up for Medicaid and the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program or food assistance. Most of them were working-class people living paycheck to paycheck. As a working mom myself, I knew what that was like. My two boys, Aaron and Billie Rae, were both seriously ill when they were born, and, in those early years, Medicaid helped them get the care they desperately needed.

Since then, I started volunteering with Down Home NC, a member-led group that organizes with working people in rural counties across the state and fought to expand Medicaid in North Carolina. I’m so proud we pushed lawmakers in our state to expand Medicaid.

Since the expansion in 2023, more than 650,000 people have enrolled. Many of them have health care for the first time in their lives. Over the years, I’d seen how important Medicaid was for working families and how difficult it was to access. Today, roughly 1 in 4 North Carolinians, or nearly 3.1 million people, use Medicaid to cover their medications, doctors’ visits, hospital stays and home care. Almost a third of those folks are seniors.

I didn’t know then that I’d be one of them one day. In 2023, after years spent helping others suffering from domestic abuse, threats from my husband forced me from my home. Suddenly, I was on my own with very little income. Thankfully, as a disabled senior, Medicaid supplements my Medicare coverage, which made it possible for me to rebuild my life at an independent living community.

Now, I’m worried that the Medicaid system will be stripped so bare that I might become a financial burden to my children, who are working hard to support themselves. The Senate Finance Committee, which Tillis sits on, released its measures to cut Medicaid that would surpass the House bill’s plans to slash $1.1 trillion from Medicaid and SNAP, just to give $1.1 trillion in tax cuts to people making over $500,000 a year.

Earlier this year, members of Down Home NC met with Tillis’ staff on Zoom, including me. They told us that no “deserving person” would lose coverage and that this was all about “making things more efficient.” They pointed to the so-called work requirements in the bill.

I wasn’t fooled by their slick talk, and you shouldn’t be either. These new restrictions will effectively be a job loss penalty. Whenever someone loses their job, they’ll also lose their health care. Additionally, by forcing states to verify that recipients are working every month, they’re hoping to bury folks in so much paperwork and red tape that they won’t be able to access the health care they need. So much for efficiency.

As one researcher put it, these restrictions are really about “kicking people out of the program who are mostly eligible.”

As for deserving, I think about all my social work clients. They were good people looking for help when they needed it most. I think of my friend Nancy, who was a drug addiction counselor. Even after she was diagnosed with cancer, she was forced to keep working, even as she got sicker and sicker, because she couldn’t afford to quit. And I think of myself. I’m a disabled senior who has spent my whole lifetime working hard to contribute to my community.

Now, I need my community to have my back. All of us deserve a government that makes life manageable for us instead of giving handouts to the rich.

owners. “Maybe they’re not ready yet, but how can we keep working with you to get to that place?”

The time and place for another anticipated RALT project - the Cottages of Idlewild - is on course for a July groundbreaking. Campbell anticipates the paperwork being finalized within the next couple of weeks. The Cottages, including 17 dwellings, will serve residents earning 30% to 80% AML.

Desmond Dunn, a southeast Raleigh native and a member of the project working group for redesigning the former Department of Motor Vehicle site on New Bern Avenue, sees unique opportunities in applying the Community Land Trust model in southeast Raleigh.

“People need to be able to graduate out of those rentals into affordable homeownership. This kind of bridges that gap,” he said.

The CLT model allows homeowners to lease their land from the trust, which acts to ensure the home’s resale value remains affordable from one buyer to another. Land leases may be transferred in estates, and thus, offer upwardly mobile homeownership across generations.

RALT, founded in 2018, is the only such entity in Wake County and one of just seven in North Carolina. Dunn sees opportunities for developing additional CLTs focusing on specific Raleigh locales like SE Raleigh.

“There are things that exist in our communities that don’t exist in other communities,” he said. “The buyer looks different. The land looks different. The deals look different.”

Smaller businesses, he continued, can help add not only affordable residential units, but build ongoing partnerships to provide another continuum of care for meeting people, as Campbell said, wherever they are on their homeownership journeys.

“We should layer services on top of that to help them get from affordable housing into other programs: education, child care, job skills,” Dunn said. “They can work on their credit and all of that, and then, get into homeownership.”

Wake County online dash board for housing access

Dione-McDowell said the fair housing industry often has been in “catch up” mode concerning technology integration, and data gathered from systems tracking homelessness should not be misconstrued as indicative of progress in fair housing opportunities. “Look what happened 10 years later,” she said. “See where they went.”

Without that, she continued, it never will be known to what degree that more access to affordable, upwardly mobile housing - per the 1968 Fair Housing Act - is being realized from one locale to another.

She said residents in adjacent zip codes could have a different life expectancy by 10-plus years, and the median Black family household’s wealth is just 15% of white family’s wealth.

Legal Aid of North Carolina’s Fair Housing project now must address rule changes in which sexual identity different from an individual’s birth certificate no longer is grounds for filing a discrimination complaint. The Trump administration’s April executive order directs the Department of Housing and Urban Development and others to avoid “disparate impact liability” claims.

“We have advocacy at every level with those who have the professional experience to move the needle,” Copeland said.

Kelly Clarke, Legal Aid’s outgoing Fair Housing Project director, said accessing and engaging human resources must be reimaged because of Legal Aid’s shrinking staff.

“We really want to rely on our private attorneys to volunteer, and they can get informative resources from us to work on cases to file those complaints,” she said.

Clarke’s successor Hope Williams is excited to pursue additional grants and engage in a forthcoming partnership in Durham. Williams could not reveal specifics since she did not have clearance for such discussions.

Dione-McDowell encouraged attendees to embrace grassroots opportunities in continuing education that begins and ends with the data.

“Host ‘Know Your Rights’ clinics. Partner with schools and churches. Talk to landlords, developers, lenders and realtors about their roles in these efforts. Continue to demand better data,” she said. “If they don’t measure it, then they cannot effectively address it or change it.”

How congregations become targets for child abuse and neglect

By Teresa Huizar
SPECIAL TO THE TRIBUNE

A recent Washington Post investigation uncovered how a Virginia youth minister allegedly used his position to abuse young boys for decades. Despite repeated allegations, churches failed to act, allowing him to move from congregation to congregation and continue preying on new victims.

This isn't an isolated incident. It's part of a systemic problem that persists because too many faith communities lack clear, consistent policies to protect children. Media scrutiny and reforms have focused primarily on priests or head ministers. To effectively prevent abuse, churches must account for others with access to children.

Many youth ministers are chosen for their charisma and passion for working with kids, not their background in child safety. One survey of 30,000 churches found that 40% don't perform adequate background checks on youth ministers, volunteers and staff.

The Post investigation highlights how abusers take advantage of these loopholes. The youth minister built trust with families, gaining access to children under the guise of mentorship and spiritual guidance. Interactions escalated over time. Casual conversations turned into questions about sexual habits. Routine meetings became overnight trips, private "Coke dates" in parked cars and, eventually, sexual abuse.

It's a familiar pattern. Child sexual abuse is almost always preceded by grooming behavior. In a study of over 1,000 victims, perpetrators employed an average of 14 tactics per case - from gift-giving and casual touching to isolating children.

Seeking to talk about sexual desires with children is a major red flag. Such conversations are six times more common in instances of child sexual abuse. Yet, in many churches, wanting to discuss "sexual sin" with youth ironically may be viewed as a positive qualification for a youth minister. Churches need to be proactive. Comprehensive background checks, fingerprinting, and reference verification should be non-negotiable for anyone with access to children. Minimizing one-on-one adult-child interactions is one of the most effective ways to prevent abuse. Routine activities should be observable, interruptible and supervised by multiple adults.

Churches must require that staff and volunteers report suspected abuse directly to law enforcement. Involving trained professionals immediately avoids any conflicts of interest. Unfortunately, predators often remain in positions of trust even after allegations surface. Many exploit the Christian ethic of forgiveness to persuade religious institutions that they're reformed and deserve a second chance. Predators don't stop because one door closes. They move to the next unsuspecting community. When an employee or volunteer leaves amid allegations, churches should respond to reference checks as candidly as the law allows.

Families have an equally vital role to play. Parents need to be comfortable talking honestly with their children about sex and personal safety. Predators take advantage of silence. If children aren't comfortable asking questions at home, they'll seek answers elsewhere - possibly from adults with bad intentions. If a child is uncomfortable talking to their parents about their body or relationships, it becomes harder to ask for help when they need it.

Youth ministers are an important part of many churches. But religious institutions must close the loopholes that abusers exploit. That will ensure religious spaces can remain places of refuge, rather than hunting grounds for predators.

Inflation causing families to identify their priorities

STATEPOINT

If you've been watching your wallet, you're not alone. As Americans continue to navigate inflation, 76% report cutting back on spending, up from 67% in 2024, according to the second annual Wells Fargo Money Study.

Most Americans also say they are making tough financial choices to navigate their lives, including delaying plans with hefty price tags, such as travel, homeownership, education, marriage and retirement.

"There is a clear social narrative surrounding the question: 'do I, and will I, have enough?'" The fact that these questions are being asked is positive because we know the earlier people focus on their money behaviors, the more time they have to course correct to achieve their goals," said Michael Liersch, head of Advice and Planning at Wells Fargo.

An overwhelming 90% of those surveyed responded they feel "sticker shock" in one or more areas of common spending, including eating out, attending a concert, buying a bottle of water or downloading a video game, and say actual costs are between 55% and 200% higher than what they expect.

"Spending is one of the most important factors to staying on track," Liersch said. "I would encourage people to align their spending with what matters most to them."

Nearly all Americans (94%) acknowledge that they want to do just that: align money choices with their values, and 86% want to be more intentional and thoughtful about spending.

Money can be an emotional topic, at times inciting envy, anxiety and secretiveness. While 87% of Americans say it makes no difference to them how much money another person has, 56% keep how much they have secret, and 32% of them say it's because they are trying to avoid people judging them.

Americans also spend time thinking about how much money other people have and wishing they could have more themselves. Forty-seven percent said they often feel envious of how much money other people have, 37% admit to obsessing about getting rich, 34% admire social media millionaires, and 23% admit to sometimes overspending just to keep up with people around them.

"Americans appear comfortable with other people being authentic about their financial situation, which is encouraging," Liersch said. "So now it's time to overcome self-judgment and reset the frame of reference from others to one's own personal benchmark."

Eighty-six percent of respondents say they have a clear picture of what they want their money to do for them. And the vast majority are optimistic about how to do it: 87% say now is a good time to save and 65% say now is a good time to invest.

Yet 61% say they need a mental reset, and are being held back by difficulty changing habits, a lack of financial knowledge and other financial responsibilities.

To overcome these challenges, Americans are seeking more financial advice year over year. Last year, 24% said they were seeking more advice from others; this year it's 36%. Looking across generations, the desire for more advice is higher among teens (54%), Gen Z adults (61%) and millennials (46%).

At a time when many are feeling cash-strapped, learning new ways to think about and manage money can help you take control of your financial future.

St. Aug's officially out as a CIAA member

One of the best college sports rivalries – in any division – is officially dead.

The CIAA is dropping St. Augustine's from its membership. The conference made the decision at its annual spring meeting earlier this month.

The Falcons' athletics program initially was suspended for the 2024-25 season as the university attempted to get its financial affairs in order. Fat chance of that happening. And it didn't. If anything, SAU is in worse shape now than a year ago – with several lawsuits filed by former coaches and unpaid vendors.

We knew football wasn't ever coming back, but apparently neither are any of the other sports. Thus, the Shaw-SAU rivalry is now in the history books. Let. That. Sink. In.

SAU's accreditation hearing is June 27, which will say a lot about its future. Will the administration file an appeal? Will it go a different route?

Whoever thought it would come to this? And yet, folks are still walking around free as a bird when they should be behind bars.

Welcome Back

The conference lost a member but regained a sport. Baseball is coming back!

The sport was dropped after the 2017 season due to cost and declining interest. Schools that kept baseball either played an independent schedule or joined another conference as an associate member.

Four teams currently sponsor baseball: Bluefield State, Claflin, Lincoln (Pa.) and Virginia State.

HBCU baseball overall is gaining in popularity. The HBCU Swingman Classic in July showcases the top 50 student-athletes during Major League Baseball All-Star Week.

The 2025 Minority Baseball Prospects HBCU All-Star Game was held last month in Kannapolis. It highlighted the top 44 student-athletes.

The conference office also hinted at other future championships for non-sponsored sports. One that immediately comes to mind is men's tennis. Time will tell.

Miscellaneous

Other news from its spring meeting:

* A contract extension with Under Armour as the exclusive apparel company through 2029. "Under Armour continues to be a powerful partner in our journey, elevating the look, feel and performance of our student-athletes while reinforcing our identity across the national stage," CIAA Commissioner Jackie McWilliams Parker said. "We are proud to move forward together with a shared commitment to innovation and impact."

* An updated 2025-2030 strategic plan that outline three priorities:

– Conflict Management Programming: workshops and training for student-athletes and coaches.

– Sports Scheduling & Alignment Review: increasing postseason competitiveness. (CIAA needs to get out of the Atlantic Region or it will NEVER win another championship.)

– Sports Sponsorship Analysis: self-explanatory.

* The CIAA Basketball Tournament probably has found its permanent home. After a rocky start and several trials and errors, Baltimore is a welcoming host. And, as the saying goes, "Go where you're wanted, not where you're tolerated."

"Baltimore has proven to be more than a host city; it's a partner in progress," McWilliams Parker said. "We are proud to move forward together with a shared commitment to innovation and impact."

A partnership between the UNC Sports Medicine Institute and NFL Flag Football Elite will expand safety access for Triangle youth.

Flag Football Elite is the nonprofit brainchild of NFL Pro Bowler Cedric Peerman to provide training and competition in a safe and fun environment.

Hagar Elgendy, a physician and vice president of the NFL Wives Association, is tasked with ensuing safety and skill development are met.

"As a league operator, physician and VP of the NFL Wives Association, I'm proud that our partnership brings together NFL-level experience and cutting-edge sports medicine," she said. "Our priority is creating a safe, fun and inclusive environment where young athletes can develop skills and confidence while minimizing injury risks."

Studies have shown that flag football is safer than tackle, with lower injury rates among young athletes.

The sport has gained in popularity over the years, especially among girls and women, and will debut as an Olympic sport at the 2028 Los Angeles Games.

"We are thrilled to collaborate with Football Elite to provide comprehensive injury prevention education and clinical support for young athletes," UNC

CIAA football returns to Durham

The SWAC announced at its annual spring meeting that it was opting in to the House Settlement. Also, the conference is lifting scholarship caps on all sports.

"This is undoubtedly a significant moment for the SWAC and our 12 member institutions," Commission Charles McClelland said. "As we move forward into a new era of intercollegiate athletics, the SWAC remains steadfast in our commitment to provide our membership with the resources needed to positively impact our student-athletes academically and athletically."

CIAA football returns to Durham this year, starting with the annual Football Media Day July 16 at 9 a.m. Coaches will host a free youth football clinic for grades three to eight July 15, 6-7:30 p.m. at Hillside High. Hope the temperatures drop by then.

Antwain Banks building Johnson C. Smith basketball 'brick by brick'

By Herbert L. White

THE CHARLOTTE POST

CHARLOTTE – Johnson C. Smith basketball coach Antwain Banks, who led the Golden Bulls to a 15-13 season in an interim role last season, was surprised by the result despite a short window to build a roster.

"I had a lot to do coming into the door in a short amount of time," he said.

Banks, who was promoted last month to permanent coach, led the Golden Bulls to a 15-13 record on an interim basis.

Among those wins was a victory in the CIAA tournament – the program's first since 2020. In an interview with The Post, Banks discussed succeeding CIAA Hall of Fame coach Steve Joyner, constructing a roster on the fly and fashioning a winning campaign. Responses are edited for brevity and clarity.

Building a winning record as interim coach:

I had a lot to do coming into the door in a short amount of time. I had to get acclimated with the roster. First of all, I had to figure out what roster I actually had when I got here.

There were some guys in the portal, lost a young man (guard Ezekiel Cannedy) that was all league, Division II Black college All-American. So, going into it thinking I was going to have one roster and actually getting here realizing that the Sports Medicine Director David Berkoff said.

"Our shared mission is to promote safe participation in sports and help young athletes reach their highest potential while prioritizing their health and well-being."

The partnership will cater to youth in Durham, Chapel Hill, Chatham County and surrounding communities. They will be exposed to:

- * Supportive performance training
- * Injury prevention seminars led by UNC Sports Medicine personnel
- * UNC professionals on-site during games and other events
- * Workshops and summer clinics for parents, athletes and coaches
- * Potential advancement in flag football at the regional and national levels
- * “Partnering with UNC Sports Medicine Institute strengthens our ability to keep athletes safe while pushing them to reach their potential," Peerman said.

"We believe every child deserves access to quality coaching and health education."

"This partnership makes that a reality for families in the Triangle."

sional basketball. Since the WNBA turned its back, Johnson signed a contract with Hefei of the Women's Chinese Basketball Association.

The WCBA is the top women's league in China, and Hefei is in the capital. Johnson won't be the only American on the squad, either. Former Stanford All-American Kiana Williams played on the team last season. And let's not forget this is China, so Johnson won't be hurting for funds.

Virginia Union
Stillman College coach Alico Dunk (well-known to CIAA fans) is the Panthers' new head women's basketball coach.

Hampton
Kenya native Peninah Mutisya was named the Peninsula Sports Club's Hampton University athlete of the year. Mutisya set program records in the 3k and 5k events at several meets, including the CAA Championships. And she's just a rising sophomore.

In lacrosse, rising senior Myles Johnson earned the CAA Leadership and Sport Excellence Award. Johnson has a 3.85 GPA and has been on the Dean's List every semester.

N.C. Central
Nelson Anderson and Matthew Swepson also were named to the CSC Academic All-District Team.

Howard
Director of track and field David Oliver was named the Mid-Atlantic Region women's coach of the year, his third such award. The Bison won their fourth straight MEAC outdoor championship after setting a meet record of 292 total points.

Baseball
Former Atlanta Braves superstars David Justice and Brian Jordan are the managers for the third annual HBCU Swingman Classic presented by T-Mobile July 11 at Truist Park.

The Classic is a part of Major League Baseball All-Star weekend activities. Fifty HBCU student-athletes were selected by a special committee. Visit roster was going to be a little different, so I had to change the plan as far as what do I have? What can they do, and then, how can we fit that into style of play? It's a testament to these young men.

And speaking of baseball, former Jackson State star Earl Sanders is one of 21 inductees into the 2025 College Baseball Hall of Fame. Sanders played at JSU for three seasons before being drafted by the Toronto Blue Jays in 1986 in the first round. He is the only HBCU player in the class.

Characteristics he looks for in players:

At the end of the day, we want winners, right? What does that look like? Being students of the game. Me, being from Indiana, I like to play with some read and reacting, guys that know how to play, guys that are a little selfless to where they don't mind sharing the basketball. So, guys that are selfless, guys that are fundamentally sound, that can pass, dribble and shoot. That sounds so basic, right?

But today you've got guys that are specialists, they do one great thing. We want interchangeable guys that can do multiple things, that can play multiple positions. Therefore, we can play a different couple different styles, depending on who we're playing. But at the end of the day, we want the togetherness, we want the selfless, we want the playing for one another and then at the end of the day let the chips fall where they may.

On replacing Joyner and fan reaction:

Obviously coming into the situation, I'm embracing it. I thought I had a good understanding of what I was walking into, as far as the legend I was following. But you're talking about 36 years – that's a long time, and obviously a testament to coach for being able to be in that position as long as he was compared to the life span of a coach at an institution [which] isn't long today.

Then you're in a situation as far as today, you talk about change. Are people comfortable with change today, you know, embracing the situation, the opportunity. First and foremost, I really wanted to come in and just put my head down at work and just let my body of work show who I was.

Then, in the process of people and the fans getting to know me and the alumni getting to know me and have conversations, just being vulnerable enough to open up and not stand-offish, just coming in with my arms open for whoever is willing to accept me and give me a fair chance.

On putting his own stamp on the program: I think just coming in establishing a culture, the foundation was already laid with coach. He had some great, great young men already in the program, and with coaching today, that's half the battle.

As far as outside the X's and O's and the scheming and things like that, do you have good kids? We had great kids, and it made it easier for me to come in and to coach those guys and to really get on them and get them to be where I needed them to be in order for us to be successful.

The task of building a relevant program:

I think what comes with that is just continuing to build. You know, we had some success. We're able to build off this past season and just continue to build on that. I don't think we get ahead of the game to where we skip any steps. Obviously, the goal is for me to come here build a championship caliber program and I just think you do that step by step.

[Football coach Maurice] Flowers was here year one, he had his bumps in the road he had to deal with. Year two, they made a bigger transition to where they able to have some success, and then year three, they're able to really have some success and continue to grow.

I don't think that changes as far as with our program, as far as continuing to trust the process, continue to build brick by brick.

BLACK AMERICANS AND JULY 4TH ACTIVITY SHEET

Hi Everyone!

Sankofa 82 and I traveled back in time to the signing of the Declaration of Independence, July 2, 1776, just to see how Blacks viewed and received that historic document. We also wanted to see how Blacks respond to it now. That document urged white Americans to unite to fight for their rights, gave them the reasons why they should fight and, it announced the formation of a new nation. This new nation was founded on the contradiction of having both free and enslaved people living in the same space.

JULY 4, 1776 CELEBRATION

After the signing of the Declaration of Independence, whites celebrated by having parades and other celebrations. This was not a reality for enslaved people and Free Men and Women of Color. While most white Americans celebrated and enjoyed the festivities of July 4th, some slaves celebrated July 4th by running away to gain their freedom or independence in the North, Canada, and Florida. Enslaved people also sought their freedom by serving in the military. They served in the Revolutionary War of 1775 where over 100,000 gained their freedom. Enslaved people served on the side that offered them freedom from slavery.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

The Declaration of Independence is the founding document of the United States. Signed on July 4, 1776, it told Americans that they are free from British rule.

The declaration included three major ideas:

- God made all men equal and gave them the rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.
- All men are created equal.
- The people have a civic duty to defend these rights for themselves and others.

THE 4TH OF JULY AND FREDERICK DOUGLASS

On July 5, 1852, Frederick Douglass gave his famous speech entitled "What to the Slave is the Fourth of July?" Douglass was asked to deliver his speech to a group of people in Rochester, New York on July 4th, but he opted out of that date and gave his speech on July 5th. Douglass' goal was to convince his audience of the hypocrisy of celebrating independence while denying freedom to slaves. Douglass stated, "I am not included within the pale of this glorious anniversary!... This Fourth [of] July is yours not mine."

THE 4TH OF JULY AND JUNETEENTH

July 4th is about liberty, but it was an imperfect liberty, because slavery still legally existed in the United States. Juneteenth is a federal holiday that recognizes the end of slavery. Even though July 4, 1776 marked the nation's first Independence Day it wasn't until almost a century later, on June 19, 1865, when slaves in Galveston, Texas learned that slavery had ended. At the end of the Civil War, President Abraham Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation effective January 1, 1863, which freed slaves in states or parts of states. Black Americans combined the words June and Nineteenth to make a new word Juneteenth. Juneteenth (June 19th) is now the day Black Americans celebrate freedom. Many Blacks do not celebrate July 4th with deep historical meaning because they know that many of their ancestors were still enslaved on July 4th.

Urban Ministries of Durham to lay off staff, reduce costs

STAFF REPORTS

DURHAM - Urban Ministries of Durham, a leading nonprofit organization dedicated to serving individuals experiencing homelessness and poverty, announced last week a series of difficult cost reduction measures, including staff layoffs, in response to financial pressures.

Rising costs, increasing demand for services, and reductions in federal funding have strained the nonprofit organization's financial resources.

The UMD Board decided to reduce its budget by 10% to prioritize essential programs and continue meeting the urgent needs of the community.

"These are some of the hardest decisions we've had to make in our 41 years," executive director Sheldon Mitchell said.

"The team members affected by these layoffs have given so much to our mission. We honor their contributions with immense gratitude and deep respect. This moment is heartbreaking, yet necessary, for the financial health of the organization and the continuity of our core services."

The organization will continue to offer food, shelter and support services at present levels despite the staffing reduction in staffing.

"We are committed to serving our neighbors experiencing homelessness and hardship," board chair Brian Vosburgh said.

"Their needs haven't changed and neither has our dedication. We have made hard calls about where to cut back, and we need the community's support at this challenging time more than ever."
